課程概述	This course aims to discuss the relationship between language and society. We will look at variation at all levels of language and how such variation constructs and is constructed by identity and culture. An exploration of varieties of language and speech as social interaction will be of particular importance to understanding this relationship. We will also consider some of the educational, political, and social repercussions of these sociolinguistic facts.
課程目標	Students from this course are expected to understand the scope of sociolinguistics and its relationship to other linguistic subdisciplines and other academic fields. They should also finish this course with an understanding of a variety of major case studies which underlie our understanding of how language functions in the community
課程要求	Active class participation (oral contributions), language description project, term paper.
